S15 Text. Professions of the recently registered heads of household in 1400

In the early 1400s years a profession was indicated for less than half of the male heads of household and this indication was slightly more frequent for the recently registered heads than for the more long-term registered (44.2% and 37.7%, respectively; N = 274 and N = 1,436, respectively; chi-square test; p = 0.043). Recently registered were more often winegrowers (20.7%, compared to 13.1%; N = 121 and N = 541, respectively; chi-square test; p = 0.033) a profession that we previously showed to be associated with a lower epidemic mortality [29]. Otherwise no particularity was apparent in the repartition of their professions except for the absence of prominent officer of the duke or of the city among recently registered heads.
